From a young age it was clear that Ash had but one ability in life – the gift of the gab. Lucky for her, that gift has landed her on television screens and radio dials for the better part of her 20's.

After forcing herself to attend university for three years, where she earned a bachelor of communications in media, Ash set off on a London adventure that cemented a lifelong love of live music and entertainment. A few short years later it all paid off when she returned to Sydney and beat 1500 other contestants to land her first TV gig, hosting Saturday morning music show The Loop, a role she enjoyed for three successful years.

2014 saw her branch out into radio, co-hosting Australia's longest running radio chart show Take 40 with Angus O'Loughlin, and then launching Shazam Top 20 around the country every night across the Today network in 2015.

2015 was also the year that saw her serve on Australia's first ever Eurovision Juror Panel, and also host Junior Eurovision on SBS. Ash has also made regular appearances on Ten's The Project, and Dirty Laundry Live for ABC.

In April 2016 Ash branched out, launching her own YouTube channel with the aim of creating fearless, authentic and honest content for young people, exploring issues such as authenticity, courage and the scary transition into adulthood. She also married her mate in Las Vegas just to balance out the serious.

While other interests include cooking, travel, fitness, researching the illuminati, and dreaming up ways to make Ricky Martin fall in love with her, Ash is a communicator at heart and loves any opportunity to share stories and adventures with those around her.

Her work has seen her interview everyone from One Direction to Taylor Swift, Ariana Grande to Adele, Bruno Mars to Slash. She's talked colonics with MGMT, enjoyed a piggy back from Ed Sheeran and been invited to be the stand-in backup bass player in 5 Seconds of Summer.

Sadly still no offer of marriage from Ricky Martin, but it's all just a matter of time.
